“Ann was one of my dearest friends, and I will miss her terribly. We enjoyed lively, passionate and gritty conversations about work and politics, subjects where we were almost completely in synch, as well as the arts, love and family, life in Austin and New Orleans and so much more. Many times since she left this earth I have reached for my phone thinking, "I must tell Ann..." only to remember that's no longer possible. I cannot express what great comfort and thoughtfulness she gave me, both in a phone conversation and in a lovely letter, over the very recent loss of my husband Peter. The world was a brighter and more compassionate place with Ann in it, and I know she will be dearly missed by the many who loved and knew her.

“Ann was a delightful and engaging friend. I know she was also a loving mother, and dedicated and enraptured grandmother. Ann's droll sense of humor got me through many a long day. It was always such fun to talk with her, as she was smart, funny, and old-school, all at the same time. We will miss her dearly.

“Ann was a wonderful woman. We worked on projects together at Pearson and had so many good conversations. I valued her spirit and humor. I can only wish Ann's family strength at this bad time.

“ Ann was a dear friend and will be greatly missed. I loved exchanging emails with her about politics, old movies, and memories of living in Queens, New York. I also have the fondest memories of working with her at Pearson where we first came to know each other.
My greatest regrets,

“ A couple of years ago, Ann and I exchanged a few family pictures. One of them was this scan of an old, old photograph of Ann that I find heartwarming and touching. If it is deemed inappropriate in this context, please feel free to remove it.
