“ I have so many fond memories of you Em... I remember dancing with you while listening to Shake Russell perform. You were so young that you had to stand on my feet to dance. We had the best time. You would always crack everyone up at the dinner table. You had the cutest little laugh and you were always smiling ear to ear. One more recent memory, was meeting up with you and the whole family for some Mexican food. You couldn't take your eyes off Brielle. She was the love of your life and it showed. You will be missed. Rest easy 'Em. ~Cara Wobbe

“ In many ways, Emily was, to me, "Herself the elf" come to life. They not only resemble each other, but she had that innocence, sprightliness, silliness, love of the critters, believer in magic and fairies, love of her people, and sensitivity.

I remember her coming next door to show me her lost tooth. On the way back to her house she dropped it and couldn't find it. But that tooth was not meant to be lost. Walking back over that same path, something told me to look down. There was the tooth.

On my kitchen shelves (you remember those?), there was a nook in which we set up a fairy space with the "gold" leafed tree. I don't remember what we decided it meant when some of those leaves took on a silver-ish hue, but it was magic.

She loved Roscoe and he was mighty fond of her.

Remember when the tiny white kitten was found out by the spur and Emily immediately wanted to claim it as her own? I am so grateful that no one claimed it and our dear vet declared him (for it turned out to be a him) healthy. Was it around her birthday? Anyway, we decided to put him in a box and tell Em that a package had been delivered for her. When she opened the box and saw him, she burst in to tears of joy. (That still brings tears to my eyes.

And the litter of pups dumped on the road for which we worked to find homes. The last one, the one with the damaged eye, she named Colleen. I think she probably would have preferred to keep them all.

A gentle, sensitive soul.

I wish you peace, little one.

Love always,

Aunt Mary

“ My dear old friend, we were just babies when we were so inseparable. Barely 21, feeling free and like we had the whole world ahead of us. Our time as super close friends might have been short but the memories we made together will always be with me. My heart hurts because you are gone much too soon. I'm lifting your family up in my heart. I love you always, Em. Rest easy sweet girl

“ *Emi had a heart of gold, the cutest most infectious laugh, and she was a shining light to everyone room she walked into. Emi was truly an amazing and good person who made me a softer and happier person. She always encouraged kindness and had a naturally loving nature.
